

Stories of Redstone

Christ at work in our midst

Countless studies have shown that we all learn in different ways. Some learn best by listening to a lecture, others need to interact and experiment with the material. Gardner's multiple intelligences theory lists 8 ways in which people learn: visual, musical, kinesthetic, interpersonal, logical, verbal, & intrapersonal. It stands to reason that if we learn in different ways, then we each probably connect with our faith in different ways too.

A great way to tap into this variation on worship is to set up "prayer stations." Stations can be tactile, reflective, creative, and simple. Many prayer station tracks will have a particular focus, such as a Biblical theme (Waiting; Fruits of the Spirit) or a Bible Story (Advent/Birth of Jesus; Holy Week.) You can find loads of station ideas to incorporate into your worship services or special prayer room on Pinterest, websites such as engageworship.org, rethinkinyouthministry.com, and in books like "Creative Prayer" by Faith McCloud. Check out our newest blog post at redstonetogether.blogspot.com to view station ideas (and pictures) that allow you to walk through the last week of Jesus' life here on earth, put together by Rev. Niki Atkinson at First Presbyterian Church of Greensburg. May your creative worship experience reflect the One who has created each one of us!

*Communicate the Word... Carry on the Work...
Change the World ... Together!*

Stories of Redstone

Christ at work in our midst

Countless studies have shown that we all learn in different ways. Some learn best by listening to a lecture, others need to interact and experiment with the material. Gardner's multiple intelligences theory lists 8 ways in which people learn: visual, musical, kinesthetic, interpersonal, logical, verbal, & intrapersonal. It stands to reason that if we learn in different ways, then we each probably connect with our faith in different ways too.

A great way to tap into this variation on worship is to set up "prayer stations." Stations can be tactile, reflective, creative, and simple. Many prayer station tracks will have a particular focus, such as a Biblical theme (Waiting; Fruits of the Spirit) or a Bible Story (Advent/Birth of Jesus; Holy Week.) You can find loads of station ideas to incorporate into your worship services or special prayer room on Pinterest, websites such as engageworship.org, rethinkinyouthministry.com, and in books like "Creative Prayer" by Faith McCloud. Check out our newest blog post at redstonetogether.blogspot.com to view station ideas (and pictures) that allow you to walk through the last week of Jesus' life here on earth, put together by Rev. Niki Atkinson at First Presbyterian Church of Greensburg. May your creative worship experience reflect the One who has created each one of us!

*Communicate the Word... Carry on the Work...
Change the World ... Together!*